

Department of International Relations
Call for Applications: Teaching Fellow Positions

The Department of International Relations invites applications for Teaching Fellow positions.

We are seeking candidates in the following areas of specialisation:

1. Political Science: Applicants should preferably hold a PhD in Political Science/International Relations and be willing to teach undergraduate and postgraduate courses in Political Science and related areas.
2. Social Science Research Methodology: Applicants should have demonstrated expertise in Social Science Research Methodology and be willing to teach research methods courses at both the undergraduate and postgraduate levels.

In addition to their areas of specialisation, selected candidates may be required to teach other courses offered by the Department, depending on departmental needs and academic requirements.

Note: Candidates who have previously applied for these positions need not submit a fresh application, as their earlier applications will continue to be considered.
